The California Constitution, Article I, section 1 reads "All people are by nature free and independent and have inalienable rights. Among these are enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety, happiness, and privacy." And section 7a states, "A person may not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denied equal protection of the laws..." In California Teachers Assn. v. State of California (1999) 20 Cal.4th 327, 331 for a teacher to pay one-half the cost of an administrative law judge the Supreme Court said "We agree with the trial court and Court of Appeal that this cost provision is unconstitutional. The imposition upon such a teacher of the open-ended cost of the adjudicator conflicts with the centuries-old common law tradition that the salaries of judges are to be borne by the state, and not by the litigants." ... "Accordingly, the Court of Appeal held that the cost provision placed too great a burden upon the exercise of the right to due process. The court also concluded that the state has no legitimate interest in denying a teacher a meaningful opportunity to be heard before termination — no matter how meritless the teacher's defense may prove to be."

Land use hearings are quasi-adjudicatory and are subject to this ruling. Regardless of wealth an appellant should not have to buy justice. It would unfairly prohibit individuals from asserting their right to petition government for a redress of grievances and for the protection of the substantial right to property. The cost of a quasi-adjudicatory hearing must be paid from the general fund.

To The Members of The Los Angeles City Council PLUM Committee,

Re: CF 09-0969 Increase in Appeal Fees

After reading the article in "City Watch" and reading the language of the proposed increased fee for filing an appeal for land use issues I oppose your resolution for the large monetary increase for an appeal to help cover the cost of processing an appeal. Apparently the issue is not cost recovery, but to stop appeals and the voice of the public.

Increasing fees are an oppressive and repressive solution for a problem that is actually simple to solve without increasing any fees.

All the City has to do is to stop granting variances and exceptions to code that force people to file appeals. When the City allows an applicant to build an over the height building or permits an applicant to excavate larger amounts of dirt allowed by code, or grants zone variances for buildings in neighborhoods where they do not belong of course residents are going to appeal. It is our responsibility as residents to support enforcement of zoning codes to keep our communities as planned and to keep the city honest.

The Planning Department is hard at work at the present time creating zoning codes that are clear, legitimate, and compatible with community plans and neighborhood requirements. The City of Los Angeles and the City Council needs to follow its own City Planning Departments zoning plans and zoning codes and not permit deviations from them. There would then be very few appeals filed, and the City would be freed from the added expense, which they estimate is $13,000.00, of processing appeals which would then be required by an appeal.

The City of Los Angeles should follow and enforce its own zoning codes to reduce the need to file appeals in the first place, instead of making it impossible for all but the wealthy land developers to do so. You are attempting to take away the power of the people.

RE: Council File: 09-0969, Item 3, DENY the CAO recommendation to increase costs of planning appeals

Dear PLUM Members:

Hollywoodland Homeowners Association represents 570 hillside homes and 150 vacant lots in the Hollywoodland Specific Plan area covering tract 6450. We oppose the CAO's recommendation to increase the fees in Los Angeles Municipal Code (LAMC) Sections 19.01 through 19.10 (excluding 19.01 F) to full cost recovery.

We have experienced mistakes that planning and building and safety have made in project approvals that needed correction through the appeal process. In the 25 years of our plan's operation, we have had 4-5 planning directors, at least 12 planners. This revolving door creates inconsistency in the department's administration of ordinances such as ours. Prohibitive fees will discourage citizens to appeal, making ordinances weak by setting precedents and allowing rights that others do not receive.

A few considerations to offset the recovery costs is an increase to developer fees, reduction of fixed costs and or pension revamping.

Thank you

Ref: Item No 09-0969 8/15/2017 PLUM Committee Agenda Fee study and recommendations for cost recovery for project planning services

Dear PLUM members,

We are writing you to request you vote down the CAO proposed fee change for land use appeals by non-applicants. Such outrageous and exorbitant fees would take away the ability of the average resident to present their concerns over land use issues that directly affect them and seek the City's help in correcting those issues. Such fees basically take rights out of the hands of the majority of citizens.

We urge you to support the City Councils 2009 decision to use the General Fund to ensure City Planning "services" such as land use appeals by non-applicants are maintained for the people.

We understand costs of running our City are rising and this measure is an attempt to bridge the gap. However, looking at the downstream effects, one can't help coming to the conclusion that it is meant to favor developers over residents. As a resident of Los Angeles this is unacceptable. For the average, hard-working citizen, just the time and energy of launching an appeal, taking time off work to attend meetings etc. is burden enough to prevent frivolous appeals. Current fees are already substantial for most, raising them further would place the appeal process out of reach thus denying our constitutional rights.

If projects are found objectionable by those (residents) that must live with them long after the developer has gone, should not the burden be on the developer to fund the process? Why hasn't PLUM considered adding a development fee to projects that trigger the need for appeal?

Sincerely,

George and Jeanne Clark

Hon. Jose Huizar, Chair
Planning and Land Use Management Committee
Los Angeles City Council

Los Angeles, CA 90012

RE: Item 3 on PLUM Committee Meeting Agenda for August 15, 2017

Dear Mr. Huizar and Committee Members:

On behalf of individuals and community organizations adversely affected by proposals contained in Item 3 of today's Planning and Land Use Committee agenda, this firm interposes a strenuous objection to the procedure utilized by City officials, the utter lack of outreach to affected communities of interest, and the violation of the Brown Act by failing to disclose to the public the actual proposed actions of the City Council.

First, we object to the faulty meeting agenda description used by City officials for Item No. 3 of today's PLUM Committee meeting agenda. The meeting agenda uses the most generic and vague description of the actions proposed: "Reports from the Department of City Planning and City Administrative Officer relative to a comprehensive fee study and recommendations for cost recovery for project planning services." This description does not put a reasonable person on notice that the Chief Administrative Officer of the City is asking the City Council to direct the City Attorney to prepare an ordinance amending the Los Angeles Municipal Code to carry out significant increases in fees – not just for project planning services, but for land use appeals which by any definition is not a "project planning service."

Nowhere in the meeting agenda description is the public put on notice of the actual proposed action: Directing the City Attorney to prepare an ordinance to increase all fees listed in the comprehensive fee study by an outside consultant to 100% cost recovery and ignoring the City Planning Department's recommendations. For this reason alone, Council should take testimony from members of the public who appear at today's hearing as a result of action alerts sent out over the weekend, but no action should be taken.

Second, we object to the City's attempt to process significant fee increases without any outreach. We are informed and believe that the City Planning Department and the Chief Administrative Officer (currently Richard Llewellyn, Mayor Garcetti's legal counsel in the Mayor's office acting as Interim CAO) thus far have only solicited input from certain real estate development groups. This is an ongoing problem with the current City Planning Director, and in this case, the City Administrative Officer – they function as if they believe that real estate developers are the only “customer” to which they are accountable. Maybe that's true as the insidious effects of the Citizens United case hollows out our democracy, and only monied contributors to campaign coffers and elected official's favorite non-profits have the ear of City officials. But such anti-democratic and elitist conduct as only meeting with lobbyists and shills of certain favored real estate development firms is not proper outreach in our elected democratic institutions.

Indeed, under Los Angeles City Charter Section 558, because fees for planning services literally affect the ability of some property owners to utilize land use provisions of the zoning code, proposals related to the fees must be referred to the Planning Commission for hearing and recommendations to the City Council. Currently, the Mayor and his attorney, and City Planning Director are trying to bypass the legitimate role of the Planning Commission to weigh the equities regarding enactment of a new fee structure without allowing meaningful and thoughtful input from Neighborhood Councils, all real estate community stakeholders (not just the big campaign contributors), historic preservation community, and various community advocacy groups on behalf of varied stakeholders in the City.

Thus, the PLUM Committee must refer this matter to the City Planning Commission for a recommendation of any amendment of this City's Zoning Code related to project planning services of the City, including a punitive fee structure the City's own cost study shows is at wild variance from other cities in California and the nation. All stakeholders in the real estate community and other affected communities ought to be heard before proceeded.

Third, land use appeals and Building and Safety Appeals should have never been included in the comprehensive cost study. We object to the City Planning Director and the Chief Administrative Officer lumping land use appeals, including Building and Safety Appeals under LAMC Section 12.26K as a “project planning service.” For a person trying to protect his or her property, tenant, or other significant interests threatened by poor planning or zoning proposals, the payment of an appeal fee for the privilege of petitioning the City government for relief and project modification could not be fairly characterized as a “planning service” of the City given to that person. In fact, it is the City's constitutional duty – a concept that seems to be lost upon, or purposely ignored by, certain partisans in the City bureaucracy including the Mayor's office.

California's Supreme Court and its Courts of Appeal have recognized that property owners, tenants, and business owners whose significant interests may be affected by a real estate development project have a constitutional right to notice and a right to be meaningfully heard before the government can act to affect those rights. Our Supreme Court counsels that the area of affected property owners, tenants, and business owners expands in size based upon the size of the proposed project and its possible impacts on people's significant interests.

For this reason, Charter Sections 563 and 564 expressly provides for a right of appeal of the many types of quasi-judicial administrative decisions of the City. The provision of a right to appeal land use decisions of the City that may affect significant interests is therefore not a "planning service," it is a Charter-imposed duty upon the City Planning Director, the Zoning Administrator, the City's planning commissions, and the City Council. These appeal duties are often spelled out in various provisions of the municipal code, confirming that the City Council has implemented the appeal rights of residents and businesses of the City. For the foregoing reasons, the conduct of land use and Building and Safety Appeals are constitutionally mandated basic government functions.

Fourth, even if somehow it might be appropriate to study the cost of processing appeals, the Planning Department and Chief Administrative Officer's "study" and data is seriously flawed. The consultant who prepared the cost study stated that the estimated number of hours for each "planning service" was provided by the Planning Department staff and the consultant undertook no effort to verify the legitimacy of these estimates. Thus, we challenge the entire basis of the proposed "full cost recovery fee" for land use appeals which is based upon an unverified Planning Department staff "estimate" of 70.68 hours.

Essentially, the City is claiming that it takes, on average, the equivalent of one staff member to spend nearly two work weeks to process and attend a hearing on a land use appeal. This estimate has no credibility. Often the City Planner responding to an appeal prepares a recommendation report that summarizes appeal points and provides a brief staff response. Once the staff report comes out, the Planning staff attends the appeal hearing to present the City's position and answer questions. Occasionally, staff needs to conduct some research of issues raised in appeals, and often the staff changes project conditions in response to legitimate concerns raised by appellants. In our experience, it would be hard to conceive a planner spending more than a few hours on an appeal and associated hearings. Because the City's "study" is unsupported with substantial evidence, it lacks the required data to justify the claim that on average a land use appeal requires 70.68 hours to process.

Additionally, the City's cost study lacks the back up information on how the blended hourly rate of $192 per planner was derived. The failure of the City to provide its cost data for public review means that the hourly rate is also not supported with substantial evidence that is capable of public review. For this reason as well, the matter should be referred to the City Planning Commission for public hearing and an opportunity of the public to test the legitimacy of the City's hourly rate determinations and estimated hours to conduct a land use appeal. Additionally, the real estate development community and historic preservation communities need to review the legitimacy of the data allegedly supporting fees for those “planning services.”

Fifth, based upon the fact that land use appeals are constitutionally and Charter mandated duties of the City, there is no rational basis for “full cost recovery” as recommended by the Mayor and his attorney. Even if the $13,538 were a lawfully derived number, which it is not, full cost recovery is unlawful if it would erect a barrier to an average property owner, tenant or small business person from exercising those constitutional rights. In so doing, the Mayor and his attorney seem to have forgotten about the federal and state constitutions that provide for a right of due process. If the City follows Mr. Llewellyn’s unconstitutional recommendation of “full cost recovery,” it raises the inference that the Mayor seeks to silence those who are merely trying to protect important rights possibly impaired by ill-conceived development projects.

And land use appeals protect important public interests. The community of Kagel Canyon was alarmed when disgraced Councilmember Richard Alarcon pushed the Department of Sanitation to allow the conduct of a semi-truck driving school on top of a methane-filled Lopez Canyon landfill. The project would have subjected the community to intolerable noise, diesel exhaust, and safety risks. Equally important, it would have broken a promise of the City to develop parkland on top of the landfill after the required years of land settlement. That community filed appeals to raise objections to the crazy truck driving school proposal, making a record of deficient environmental review and land use inconsistency. The Los Angeles Superior Court invalidated the City’s unlawful decision, and the community successfully protected itself from the impacts of a project proposal that should have been laughed out of the Council office, but was not. The Project was shelved by the City – as it should have been from the start.

With the appeal fees raised from a non-frivolous level of $89 to $13,538 for two levels of appeal, it is doubtful that Kagel Canyon community members could have fought off the dumb idea of running diesel-trucks around on top of a methane infused landfill. Any maybe that is the goal of Mayor Garcetti and his attorney Richard Llewellyn. Perhaps the purpose of the Mayor’s proposed land use appeal fee is to squelch the right of affected individuals to petition their government for redress. If so, the City risks Section 1983 litigation for imposing the “full recovery fee” for the real purpose of punishing First Amendment protected speech it does not care to address. The proposal of this fee by the Mayor and his attorney amounts to nothing less than trying to tell the citizens of this City that they no longer have a voice, and that they should sit quietly as campaign contributors are allowed to trash the City with nonsense like truck-driving schools where parkland was promised to the people. No. “Full cost recovery” is not only unconstitutional in this context, it is wildly undemocratic.

Sixth, the fee for land use appeals must be a relatively nominal amount to permit all stakeholders of the City to participate in the constitutionally mandated and City Charter provided land use appeal process. As shown in the City's own fee study, the City of San Jose imposes an appeal fee of $100. By comparison, the Mayor and his attorney proposes $13,538 to be leveled upon persons most vulnerable to harm imposed by the City's land use process. This is precisely the sort of governmental duty that has always been and always should be paid out of the taxpayer's general fund. It is a classic governmental function like police and fire.

Seventh, even if cost shifting away from the General Fund was even appropriate, it is quite ironic that the Mayor and his attorney have not considered or proposed recovering the estimated cost of processing appeals from those who cause the need to conduct them – the real estate development community. Right now the City is levying a surcharge on all real estate development permits to create a subsidy fund to pay for “maintenance” of the City's General Plan. Is there a legitimate basis to cross-subsidize the cost of appeals that arise out of the real estate development activities in the City by levying a surcharge to pay for it in a way similar to the General Fund maintenance fee? We don't know, because the Mayor and his attorney have not studied it. Either the cost of land use appeals should be borne as a legitimate general fund expense, because it is a fundamental municipal duty, or cross-subsidy ought to be explored. But the Mayor and his attorney's proposal for “full cost recovery” ought to be unmasked for what it really is: an effort to silence the people of the City.

Eighth, the fee proposal should also be sent back to the City Planning Commission to consider necessary reforms to the City's fundamentally flawed Building and Safety Appeal process. Judge James Chalfant of the Los Angeles Superior Court has declared that the City's Building and Safety Appeal process is so slow, cumbersome, and ineffective that he will unlikely ever require someone to exhaust the Building and Safety Appeal before suing the City over building permits. He concluded that the process is neither prompt nor effective.

Due to drafting flaws in the City's current fee ordinance, the Building and Safety Department has unlimited discretion to determine the appeal fee for the initial level of review, and unlimited time to make the initial decision. This has resulted in huge delays in processing Building and Safety Appeals which led Judge Chalfant to question its efficacy. It is simply unlawful to have no set fee or time limit to act for the first level of appeal. At the second level of appeal, the fee currently is inappropriately set at $500 per appeal, a remnant of the City Council's failure to deal with the fee inconsistencies for Building and Safety Appeals in 2009.

Additionally, the multiple layers of review of a Building and Safety Appeal assures that it can never protect affected communities because City officials allow construction to occur during the extremely long review process, resulting in harmful projects being turned into a fait accompli.

Building and Safety Appeals ought to carry with them a high priority of very fast review and impartial administration of the City's laws to stop illegal projects. The recent mega mansion project built by flaunting the City's laws serves as a cautionary tale of how impotent the City is when it comes to enforcing its own project conditions and zoning laws. A revised Building and Safety Appeal process ought to be an additional outcome of this review process of the fees.

For this reason, both the fee structure and the Building and Safety Appeal process should be referred to the Planning Commission to conduct a hearing on how to improve this fatally flawed process that does little to protect the City's residents from open defiance of the City's laws, conditions, and mitigation intended to protect affected communities.

In conclusion, Item 3 on today's PLUM Committee meeting agenda is a violation of the Brown Act, a violation of constitutional rights of affected persons to petition their government for redress of harmful projects proposed before the City, and requires much closer study at the City Planning Commission level before the City Council proceeds to implement such a punitive fee structure for both the real estate development community, the historic preservation community, and the communities affected by the land use decision making of City officials.

Most sincerely,

CF09-0969 Proposal to increase appeals fee

I am a Budget Advocate who has met with the Department of City Planning for several years and have made numerous recommendations, most in support of the proposals of the Department. I am speaking for myself as there is insufficient time to convene meetings of the Budget Advocates on this matter.

There are services that do not require full cost recovery and this is one of them. In April I brought a list of proposed Revenue Sources to the Budget and Finance Committee during the Budget Advocates' presentation before the Committee. The proposal to charge the public $13,000 for an appeal was not among those Revenue Sources.

This proposal is inequitable on the face of it. It assures middle and low income neighborhoods will be the losers. It gives the impression that Los Angeles does not value input from those neighborhoods and rather, would permit well-heeled developers to run over struggling middle class and impoverished people.

Appeals often make a project substantially better, for the neighborhood AND FOR THE DEVELOPER. Again the developer on the project we appealed, congratulated us on making the project better.

If the goal is to make an appeal too expensive for ordinary folks, you should consider the real cost of an appeal – attorney fees, hiring expert consultants, hundreds of dollars in copying fees, many days off work as well as time away to discuss proposed projects with neighbors and community groups including Neighborhood Councils and offices of the City Councilmember.

The City often makes mistakes in the planning process. Neighbors should not be penalized for correcting those errors.

The burden of accessing the appeals process should not fall to those who are simply trying to pursue due process. We as citizens, property owners and renters, already pay property taxes, sales taxes and other fees to support City services.

It is impossible to believe that an appeal costs the City $13,000. Having appealed a matter that was sustained in part and having knowledge of how City government works, I cannot at all visualize how that sum was arrived at.

The appeal process can bring a modicum of equity for a project but not when the fee exceeds $108. Developers stand to make millions off their projects. Impacted neighborhoods feel like they stand to lose the little leverage they may have to bring the developer to the table, to look at a project, and ultimately to make improvements.

The appeal process can create better projects but only if access is assured by low filing fees.

Thank you in advance for understanding more of the impacts related to the appeals fee. Please do not raise the current filing fee of $108.

Sincerely,

Barbara Ringuette
