

On Wed, Aug 10, 2011 at 6:52 AM, Jim Brookshire <jbrookshire@mac.com> wrote:

In some of our densely populated neighborhoods in Los Angeles, we desperately need these parking spaces. I live in an apartment in the area surrounding LACMA and because of public parking and events our parking situation was dire already, before the loss of this "once legal" form of parking. Most units at best have one covered parking spot, this means spouses or roommates must find parking often on other streets blocks away. I have one of those single "shoebox" garages that my car will barely fit in and allow me to get out of the car. I park there as much as possible but can not load or unload my car if it is in the garage spot. I have received a warning ticket by parking on the apron for the two minutes it took me to run up to my apartment and get my dog to load him into the backseat. This is just one example of something that effects me personally on a daily basis, there are many more. We need these spaces back.

Jim Brookshire