To the Los Angeles City Council,

Regarding the animal welfare committee report, if the city of Los Angeles wants less revenue they will get less by stopping the sale of bunnies and their accessories. Our city is going backwards. At the end of each year, the cost of our business license is paid according to our sales. Without the bunnies the city will get at least 25% less revenue. Is this what you want? The other neighboring cities will get the revenue that Los Angeles is losing. If the purpose is to bring in less revenue and close down small business then you are on the right track.
