It's a leaking rowboat, Dan. No way to plug all the holes at once. I'm doing my best.

My concern is that you're not doing this now, at least not in a public way. The charade of 8,807 animals touted as "adopted" when in fact they were sitting in cages should have been a red flag. If that were just my making a mountain out of a molehill, then why did the city revert its numbers to correct that, but without public disclosure?

It's the same with the euthanasia claim being down. Well, when you charge the public $25 to drop off an animal in need - whether or not the animal is theirs - you virtually lock the front door of the shelters. And when you don't know EXACTLY whether every animal who leaves the building is in a home or not, or warehoused, dead or transferred further, yeah, you could say the rate is down, but it is as irresponsible as the fake adoption rate.

It feels like you are more often than not looking to dismiss the current in favor of only looking to fixing things "down the road." The problems are here and now, and the animals in these predicaments, like those bred at the shit hole auto repair business, deserve to be spoken for now. I mean, have you collectively done anything to stop the sale of breeder permits to THIS place and places like it? What do you think becomes of those animals? Beyond the breeding (and sales) are you not the bit troubled that you can't do anything about the filthy oil flowing toward where this dog is laying?

If you don't put revenue as Job 1, you're missing the boat. I have laid out for you a minimum of $3.2mm she fails to bring in each year. You should find out why. That $3.2 could easily be $7mm or more.
