Clean communities help to contribute to the economic vitality of neighborhoods and can signal the overall livability of a city. It signifies community engagement and neighborhood pride. A clean street can also help to measure the success of basic City services.

Mayor Garcetti has focused on a "Back to Basics" agenda, with direct services committed to making Los Angeles more livable and sustainable. Councilmember Cedillo initiated a pilot program 'Keep It Clean' in Council District One to improve how the City attacks abandon waste.

Under the Council District One pilot program, Mayor and Council approved a $5 million allocation this fiscal year to create a program specific to combat blight in our alleys and abandon waste. This program will help develop SANSTAT, a data driven program that will help the City better allocate resources for trash pickup in the near future.

There is also a need to reexamine relevant services in the City's densely populated, pedestrian heavy neighborhoods, improve the process for businesses, citizens, and tax-assessed districts to partner with the City, facilitate broader collaboration amongst various city departments and explore the role enforcement and regulation serve in fulfilling the City's livability goals.

I THEREFORE MOVE the City Council instruct the City Administrative Office (CAO) to develop a "CleanStreetsLA" strategy and report back in 60 days on how to clean up our neighborhoods by better coordinating city services, improving external communication and community engagement strategies, and;how to logistically implement the recommendations.
