

My name is Chandler. My wife and our two wonderful children share a home in Studio City, California. We have lived here for 12 years, quite happily enjoying the terrific public school system, the myriad of great restaurants and endless local owned boutiques and shops found only in the heart of a great metropolis.

My wife and myself are both in the Arts which necessarily affords unpredictable income as our various projects begin and slowly come to fruition. In order to stabilize our money flow we began to share our guest bungalow in back with a variety of guests. This extra income has been a god send and enabled us to stay in our home and allow our children to finish their primary education right here in the city.

We share our home with grand parents visiting their grand children. People breaking into all aspects of the entertainment business, many of whom are on an extremely tight budget. The price and flexibility we provide gives them a chance I doubt they would have otherwise to pursue their dreams in this regard. We have professionals and tourists from all over the globe. I know we as a family are richer for getting the chance to know them as I can only imagine the city is.

We are always excited to act as ambassadors for this great town. Providing directions to our favorite museums, parks, restaurants, yoga instructors, kinkos, super markets and every other imaginable local business.

In having these great guests come and visit we have happily beautified our property. Our neighbors are quite happy to have their friends and relatives stay with us in walking distance, convenient to their own homes.

The experience of home sharing has made our lives richer, our little neighborhood richer and added to the local character and experience that is Los Angeles. Any minor adjustments aside, please enable this great tradition to continue. This is what made this city great, the mixing and sharing of culture, family, business and ideas that make up the city of angels.

Best regards!
