Comments for Public Posting: While I understand the urgency of bridge housing building projects, I do not understand the complete lack of regard for residents who live near the construction sites. In the case of 100 Sunset, Venice (the old MTA lot), neighbors suffered very bad allergy like symptoms for days. Watering eyes, sore throats, headaches. And, it all occurred when jackhammering and augering was happening during the construction process. Because of CEQA exemptions, we have no idea what we were breathing. Especially from the earth removed from under the old concrete. Watering down of the elements was only conducted after complaints to AQMD and the EPA. We should have rights. You have taken them away.

Comments for Public Posting: I live around the corner from the MTA lot. This is a residential area full of families. Bypassing standard environmental procedures threatens the community. This construction project should be subject to the same testing as any other project.
