Domestic violence broader definition.

Ultimately, I think education is key here. I think if someone's unhappy in a relationship, they should be direct about it, instead of going around behind someone's back and trying to hurt them in retaliation for what they feel someone's done wrong to them. Nobody in this city is direct. They dance around the issues.

Another thing. We need to be cautious about what we define as a crime. I think it should definitely be taken into consideration, but if significant other is impatient and controlling, and you don't succumb to their boredom or make them happy that they have a right to throw the book at you and add to your record. I see the good intentions you have but I also see opportunities for a lot of unwarranted problems as well. (Slippery slope.)
