Comments for Public Posting: Grubhub collects "processing fees" in addition to the commissions from restaurants. Once a cap on commission is set, these online companies will try to make up the reduced portion of commissions with other names. Such attempts should not be tolerated. Among the online food delivery companies, Grubhub is the most damaging to restaurants. If you withdraw from Grubhub, which belongs to Yelp, Yelp will leave only malicious reviews on your restaurant.

Comments for Public Posting: I have lived in South Los Angeles for 10 years. I never imagined that the city would be against food delivery. How can city councils harm the community that represent all their voters? First of all We don't have enough options, is the Council aware that much of South LA is a food desert? In these times of emergency, it is not the time to experiment with essential elements such as food and our medicines. I demand that you vote against the rate limit motion. I have worked in the restaurant industry and I know the damage they will do if they are forced to close their doors.
