Summary: COVID-19 has impacted many people in different communities throughout the country. This deadly and contagious virus has ravaged through our healthcare system and our economy. But there is a silver lining amidst this pandemic; pollution levels in Los Angeles have dropped significantly due to a massive reduction of vehicular traffic. In fact, Los Angeles has seen some of the cleanest air in the world. Most people, if not all, want to continue to see cleaner air and less traffic on the road in the community. Less pollution means healthier and happier communities, while less traffic can equate to a decrease in vehicular accidents and stress from commuting. Even businesses have now seen that telecommuting can be a feasible option. THEREFORE, the Wilshire Center-Koreatown Neighborhood Council SUPPORTS Council File 20-0498 as written to instruct various departments in the City to find ways on how to encourage businesses to continue to have their employees telecommute when viable.
