Street space for restaurants during COVID-19

COVID-19 has decimated our local restaurants, many which are struggling to survive. While some have been able to make some money with takeout, most of the time it has not been sufficient to cover their expenses. As we will likely have to maintain social distancing for some time to come, and as independent restaurants are at risk of going out of business, we therefore ask that the city make more room in the public right of way and parking lots where appropriate to allow restaurants to seat more diners outside while maintaining social distancing, increasing their chances of survival.

Furthermore, we demand immediate action to include street vendors as participants in any program that allows expanded outside dining. Street vendors should be able to participate in any outside dining program under rules that supersede existing sidewalk vending restrictions (pre-COVID-19 and under COVID-19), allowing them to operate under the same conditions, and with the same no-fee permit structure, as proposed for brick-and-mortar establishments. In any other issues, street vendors should be treated as participants in any outside dining program with special considerations for their business model and general socioeconomic status.

Sincerely,
