Comments for Public Posting: Los Angeles City Council should move towards a more independent, transparent, and accessible redistricting process. To restore trust in the process and those elected in those districts. The process should not include the input of office holders and their staffs but rather made entirely independent of them. A truly independent redistricting commission for the City of Los Angeles would restore trust in the process and ultimately give legitimacy to office holders. Rather than the mistrust exemplified and augmented by Huizar's scandal that is a symptom of the problem and should serve as an example of what not to do in future redistricting efforts. Trust in City Hall is reaching new lows every week, we can't afford a repeat of the last redistricting process.
