Comments for Public Posting: California's history and legacy is based on Western traditions beginning with the Spanish and into the 18th Century and the railroads. The history of the movies were the Western's and cattle ranching and Gene Autry, Roy Rogers to name a few. In the 1950's and in the early nineteen hundreds the majority of Westerns were filmed in California and ranching a major industry. To destroy the rodeos and Western history is a slap in the face to early California Western culture. Does California want to destroy every vestige of its cultural history. San Francisco is no more and now the rodeo is being suggested cancelled. Is there no meaning of the great history of California to be admired?
