Comments for Public Posting: Rodeos are not cruel to animals. Those animals are bred to do their eight second job, not every day either, but it ranges from 10-40 times a year. Outside of the rodeo, those animals are taken better care if than some human famy members. They are gentle, nurtured and docile when at their homes. Cowboy way of life goes back to almost beginning of time and has become careers for many including contractors, cowboys and cities/organizations that host them. Many give scholarships, keep programs in operation by the rodeo donation and allows non profits to have fund raising contribution for their programs. Cities also benefit with attendees spending their money in that city. Spurs, Riggins, flank straps don't injure the animals. Just like boxers use gloves, or football players using pads, or people wearing suits to their jobs or safety glasses. It is part of the rodeo lifestyle. Maybe tall need to scream go to the stock contractors ranch to see how stock is taken care of. We have millions who don't have food to live, that's a true cause that needs help, not rodeos and taking away livelihoodifference. These animals are worth millions, why would anyone mistreat them?? Fight for true cause to make a difference, and that cause isn't rodeos.

Comments for Public Posting: I am in full support of rodeo in the state of California. I support rodeos, roping events, Vaquero events, Charro events, various equestrian events, PBR events, and any other events that promote the western lifestyle that has become a tradition in this state and others for decades. Please do not allow the wants and the will of certain activist groups that do not share this same support of the western lifestyle, to be forced upon those of us that do support it! Just because there are those that don't fully understand it, nor appreciate it, does not mean it should be done away with.
