Comments for Public Posting: Animal activists have the wrong idea about how rodeo stock are treated. These animals are given the best of care so that they can compete to the best of their ability. All of the animals are very expensive and no one wants them to get hurt. Not only would there be a loss of income to the contestant/stock producer, but these animals become a part of their family. Even some of the bucking stock will eat out of your hand until they are loaded into the chute. These animals know their job and are breed for it. There are few jobs for animals that last around eight seconds. If an animal did not want to perform, they wouldn't. They would not leave the chute, would not buck, or they would just lay down. There are many photographs of the bucking animals at a rodeo where the "mean mechanical device" or the flank strap has come off and the animal is still bucking. They want to! Rodeo is a way of life and a part the foundation of the western life. It teaches great ethics, compassion and that the animal's needs come before yours. We need more of this in America.

Comments for Public Posting: Rodeo, western, and animal based sporting events are being unfairly demonized by a small, but vocal and well funded minority that uses false/misleading information, scare tactics, and duplicity to move their extremist views and agendas into the spotlight and coerce the public and local governments to blindly follow them without doing their own research or taking the time to listen to the actual participants of these sports. They don't care about the rich tradition of rodeo, of the care and love poured into the animal participants daily, or the millions of dollars in revenue it will cost LA through not hosting the events themselves and also the thousands of people who will subsequently boycott coming to or doing business in LA at all. California's cowering to animal extremist groups and anti-agriculture stances have already put a massive black mark on the incredible history farming, ranching, and rodeo previously enjoyed. Don't make it worse.

Comments for Public Posting: Spend your time research this way of life, before you make snap decision only on what you believe you have seen. Your perception is your reality, make yourself responsible for opening your perspective. Spend time with a horse training or a rodeo contestant and document their way of life before you change it without witnessing it.
