Comments for Public Posting: Friends of mine rodeo. They take better care of their animals than most people do their domestic pets. The stock used in rodeos are also very well taken care of. A good bucking bull or bronc often cost well over 100,000.00. At that cost they get the very best of care. The steers and calves are also taken extremely good care of. The roping events are copies of how these animals are Dr'd on a ranch. Wraps are placed around the steers horns to keep them from getting rope burns or any injury on their head. The PRCA has also added a jerk down rule in the tie down roping so the calves don't get injured. Most of these animals if not being used at a rodeo or other western event would probably be dinner on your table. Which is more humane?
